Report released on church's net-zero efforts

By Jim Patterson*

It's been a year since most of the agencies of The United Methodist Church committed to reducing greenhouse-gas emissions to a point in 2050 where they are adding nothing — net zero — to cause global warming.

The most important lesson learned so far? It's an extremely complicated endeavor.

"An important focus of this work is equity and justice," said the Rev. Jenny Phillips, senior technical adviser for environmental sustainability at United Methodist Global Ministries, who is a coconvener of the agencies' net-zero effort.

"We want to be sure that the interventions we take are ones that don't off-load more suffering on communities that are already experiencing hardship due to pollution and climate," she said. "We could all just run out and buy whatever offsets are on the market, but if they're offsets that have negative impacts on certain communities, that's not the right solution."

Offsets involve activities such as the funding of planting trees and renewable energy sources to make up for the release of greenhouse gases. An organization can purchase such offsets in the marketplace.

"We're counting emissions, but how are we also going to track and count our equity injustice impact?" Phillips said. "That's a puzzle that we don't have an answer to yet."

The net-zero commitment was announced on Earth Day in 2021 and a report of the first year's effort was released by the United Methodist Interagency Just and Equitable Net-Zero Coalition on April 19, three days ahead of this year's Earth Day celebration.

Initiatives the first year included training on how to use the EnergyStar Portfolio, a tool that tracks energy use and emissions from buildings, and some exploratory discussions on how to keep equity and justice concerns in mind while making changes to cut emissions.

"Net-zero is an important goal that will require collaboration and innovation within the broader church and beyond," said Jake Barnett, director of sustainable investment stewardship for the church's Wespath Benefits and Investments, in a press release.

Along with Phillips, Barnett is a co-convener for the agencies' net-zero work. "Our agencies look forward to continuing to partner and learn from each other's differentiated expertise as we work to bring about the systemic change that will support a just and equitable net-zero future," he said.

All United Methodist boards, commissions and agencies have made the net-zero commitment, with the exception of the United Methodist Publishing House, whose bottom line was severely reduced by the coronavirus pandemic.

"The number and nature of in-person activities for all ages have been significantly disrupted for most churches and as a result, they've required fewer worship, educational and program resources," said the Rev. Brian Milford, president and publisher of the publishing house

Revenue dropped 43% during the pandemic, Milford said. The Publishing House also receives no allocations from the denomination. Last year, it reduced its staff from 300 to about 130 and sold its building, relocating to much smaller offices and transitioning most employees to remote work. Those changes have almost certainly lowered the agency's greenhouse emissions.

But although the Publishing House hasn't been able to commit to net-zero emissions by 2050, it is actively working on it

"They have been participating in the trainings and in the conversations," Phillips said. "They are very engaged."

Other agencies, such as the United Methodist Commission on Archives and History, also have unique challenges. Paper files and artifacts need specific climate controls to stay preserved.

"We do rely on energy to maintain exact humidity and temperature controls in

From Your Bishop: Whatever It Takes to Love Someone

God so loved the world that he gave his only Son, so that everyone who believes in him won't perish but will have eternal life. God didn't send his Son into the world to judge the world, but that the world might be saved through him. John 3:16-17 (CEB)

Following the celebration of the Resurrection of Christ, we focus on how much God loves us and how much we love God. We are invited into a love relationship with God through Jesus Christ. Are you ready to follow Jesus and deepen your love of God?

When you love someone, you do whatever it takes to sustain that relationship. After growing up in blue-collar families, Elaine and I were married when we were eighteen. We gave up scholarships to different colleges because we knew our love was more important than money. Of course, the decision to get married made us responsible for paying the rent, putting food on the table, and paying tuition. We found jobs and enrolled in college part-time on the way to the altar.

Over the next five years, I had many hard, manual labor jobs. Most of them were on the night shift. I worked the assembly line in an axle factory, washed buses in freezing rain at midnight, stacked rough-cut lumber in a sawmill, scrubbed toilets, washed floors, and cleaned windows hanging outside a ten-story building. One of my easier jobs was working with rats and colleges sophomores in the learning lab of the psychology department.

In the early years of our marriage, I was willing to do whatever it takes to sustain our relationship. Of course, there were blisters and cuts on my hands and aching muscles in my arms and shoulders. You might think that I was miserable, but you would be wrong. Being in love was such a blessing I was willing to take responsibility for what God had given me. Whenever I was worn out and tired, I would count my blessings and dream of being with Elaine. Sound romantic? You bet! I'm still in love with her.

I began following Jesus Christ because I was deeply moved by how much he loved me. My sins were forgiven, my life was changed, and my faith was in God. I was in love with God and willing to do whatever it takes to sustain our relationship. The Great Commandment directed me to love God with all my heart, soul, and mind; and love my neighbor as myself. In short, there was work to do to stay in love with God and share the blessing with others

Following Jesus is never easy. It requires sustaining a relationship and loving others. You may become discouraged or disappointed when the person you love does not respond. Remember, God did not stop loving you when you did not respond. When we go the second mile to care for others, we find a joy that moves us to more risk-taking service in the name of Jesus Christ. Sound romantic? You bet! God's love is like that.

UMCOR collaborating to relieve the suffering of Ukrainians

The United Methodist Committee on Relief (UMCOR), a Texas-based humanitarian organization focused on Ukraine and Ohio Health are collaborating to send 47,895 pounds of medical supplies and equipment worth $935,000.00 to three hospitals in Kyiv, Ukraine. AEC Parcel Services is handling transport of the supplies, which are being sent in three shipments.

The effort was put together by the Arlene Campbell Humanitarian Foundation, headquartered in North Zulch, Texas, which has links to health facilities in Ukraine. UMCOR is paying specific costs, including transportation, of approximately $160,000. Ohio Health, a not-for-profit, charitable, health care ministry of The United Methodist Church, donated the supplies through a medical surplus program. UMCOR put the foundation in touch with Ohio Health and opened the door to the United Nation's Logistics Cluster to move the supplies into Ukraine after they arrived in Poland from the U.S. via chartered jet.

The first shipment arrived at the State Ukrainian Health Ministry Heart Institute in Kyiv on Thursday, April 14. The second shipment was shared between the Heart Institute, the Center for Pediatric Cardiology & Cardiac Surgery Clinic for Children and the National Specialized Children's Hospital, which is the nation's largest children's hospital, on April 20. The third shipment is scheduled to follow soon, according to Roland Fernandes, general secretary of UMCOR and its parent organization, Global Ministries.

"UMCOR is pleased to facilitate both the procurement and the transportation of essential medical supplies to war-torn Ukraine," he said. "We multiply our own efforts and the generosity of our contributors when we engage in creative service partnerships."

Lena Denman, president of the Arlene Campbell Humanitarian Foundation, expressed appreciation of UMCOR for its role in the project.

"The Foundation is honored to receive the support of the United Methodist Committee on Relief for our efforts to provide medical supplies and medical equipment to the State Ukrainian Health Ministry Heart Institute in Kyiv, Ukraine," she said. "This hospital serves not only Kyiv, but also suburbs of Kyiv that have experienced mass atrocities. It was because of the support of UMCOR and its contributors that we were able to arrange transportation for these three shipments of vital medical supplies."

"This is the biggest shipment we have ever had," said Dr. Vitaly Demyanchuk, deputy director of the State Ukrainian Health Ministry Heart Institute in Kyiv. "Every box contains useful supplies that give us the possibility of providing high quality medical care to our patients, for wounded individuals and others in our area. We thank all of the American people. Together we are strong."

Playing a vital role in the transport of these supplies is AEC Parcel Services, a Chicago-based shipping company. AEC Parcel's long-established connections with key points and customs agencies on the Ukrainian border has made them one of the few shipping companies still able to deliver regular parcels and aid from the U.S. and Canada. When war broke out, AEC partnered with several international nonprofits to provide greatly reduced overseas shipping costs to Ukraine and other affected areas

Items in the shipments include wound care/triage supplies, surgical kits and masks, examination gloves, mask respirators, varieties of hospital gowns, stethoscopes, sterile containers and basic medicine.

The Arlene Campbell Humanitarian Foundation, founded in 2016, provides medical supplies for hospitals in Kyiv and helps facilitate physician training and research programs between U.S. and Ukrainian physicians. It continues the work of the late Arlene Campbell who, in 1989, started a not-for-profit agency called Russian Relief, one goal of which was to supply medical equipment and supplies to Ukrainians. The current foundation memorializes Ms. Campbell.

Ohio Health represents 35,000 associates, physicians and volunteers, a network of 12 hospitals, more than 200 ambulatory sites, hospice, home health, medical equipment and other health services in 47 counties of the

As part of the General Board of Global Ministries, the mission and humanitarian assistance agency of The United Methodist Church, UMCOR provides relief and recovery response throughout the world. UMCOR is extensively engaged in services for refugees from Ukraine both inside Ukraine and beyond in the wake of the Russian invasion of late February 2022.

Chicago church honors legacy of accessibility

By Anne Marie Gerhard

Rev. Tom Grey (center) and UCRP members gather outside the church to dedicate the wheelchair ramp completed in September 1979.

A rusty ramp originally built in 1979 is being replaced as part of the church's renovation project.

Current members of United Church of Rogers Park stand cautiously on the deteriorating front steps leading to the church's main entrance. A capital campaign will help create a state-of-the-art front entrance and make the church more accessible and welcoming to all.

The concrete steps leading up to United Church of Rogers Park's (UCRP) front doors are crumbling. An accessible ramp built more than 40 years ago is deteriorating and no longer meets city codes. The front entrance's dilapidation is more than an eyesore, but church leaders say it's a barrier to the church's longstanding mission to be an accessible place for all.

"We believe that making our physical space more accessible and welcoming will have a spiritual impact on our community," said Rev. Hope Chernich, UCRP's co-pastor. "God's grace is made real through the material world. Welcoming our neighbors into a beautiful and accessible space is a testimony of God's love for Rogers Park."

For several years, church leaders have been planning and preparing to find a way to make the repairs. In March 2021, they launched the Uplift Accessibility Campaign to raise $300,000 to cover the costs.

"The project will create a new state-of-the-art entrance on our southwest corner, build an interior accessible ramp to our library and classroom, and make space for a mechanical lift to take people to our main floor for worship services," said Chernich. "These changes will open much-needed access to our sanctuary and community services."

UCRP has been serving the Rogers Park neighborhood on Chicago's Northside since 1872, and the original three-story building was built at the corner of Morse and Ashland in 1905. The church has been a vital part of the Rogers Park community and has a legacy of being committed to accessibility.

The Rev. Tom Grey served UCRP in the 1970s after it merged with the Congregational congregation and when many city churches were struggling to survive as suburban churches were growing.

"The previous pastor made an assessment that the congregation would not be able to sustain ministry in the building," said Rev. Grey. "But I saw it as a church in a city neighborhood that was just waiting to be used for ministry with the community."

At the time, the building's structure presented many accessibility obstacles, especially for people using a wheelchair, said Sue Davies, who joined the church with her husband in 1974 as a young family just starting out in Rogers Park.

"The church dining room and kitchen were located on the third floor with no elevator access," said Davies, who said while it gave the congregation a view of Lake Michigan, it was difficult to access. "The problem was people had to climb two flights of stairs to get to meeting rooms and three flights of stairs to get to food or coffee."

Another lack of accessibility was getting into the front of the church. A long set of solid concrete steps with no handrails led up to the church entrance. Then, to make matters worse, there was no level way into the Narthex and Sanctuary, Davies added.

Rev. Grey, Sue Davies' husband Tom, and a friend of theirs Tom Hickey, who generously donated his architectural skills pro bono, (coincidentally, all are named Tom), came together and began making plans, which included a new elevator, wheelchair ramp, and the expansion of the storefront thrift shop.

Rev. Grey said the project was not a hard sell and required no committee meetings because of the three Toms' excellent planning and presentation, which the church embraced.

"Once it started, the pieces just started to fall into place," said Grey. "It was a tangible project to say that we are alive and well at 1545 Morris and in ministry to the community we are in."

The construction changes opened doors for many groups to meet and new members to come and worship – and to this day, the building provides a safe haven for the community and physical space to gather. UCRP hosts the Care for Real food pantry, Transformative Law Center, Refugee One, a daycare center, yoga classes, depression groups, AA and NA groups, and more. Ministries include an after-school program, a summer program, a learning garden, Community Feast, the New To You Thrift Shop and inclusive spaces for worship and spiritual growth.

Past meets present needs

More than four decades later, United Church continues its mission of serving the constantly changing Rogers Park neighborhood. Today's leaders say they continue to be inspired and supported by the congregation who had the forethought to make the building accessible to all in the 1970s. In 2022, members of the former congregation donated $50,000 towards the campaign to honor the initial accessibility work.

UCRP leaders say the donation gave the campaign a great boost and say it's not only a reinvestment in the physical structure of the building but will bear fruit for generations to come.

"(The project) will allow people to enter the building in all seasons of their life," said Rev. Lindsey Joyce, co-pastor at UCRP. "All of us go through seasons of more ability and less ability. If you just had a baby and need a stroller, come into the building recovering from illness or surgery, or are disabled and use a walker or wheelchair, not only are we saying are you welcome and want you in our building – it's actually possible. It's so critically important to who we are."

Rev. Grey, who is retired and living in Washington State, says the congregation's concerns today mirror what he heard when he pastored at UCRP. He believes the Uplift campaign is an investment in the future and says he's happy to see his former church keeping the mission alive.

"Making the building accessible gives you access to your neighborhood, and your building becomes the ministry," said Grey.

The Uplift Accessibility Campaign is close to reaching its goal but still needs to raise the last $70,000. The committee is looking for individuals or organizations to donate to help complete the project. If you would like to help or learn more, visit ucrogerspark.org/uplift.

United Methodist Association of Communicators

Northern Illinois Conference Communications wins three peer awards

The NIC Communications team took home three awards from the United Methodist Association of Communicator's Virtual Awards Gala on March 31with the theme "Embrace Faith," which acknowledged the challenges the pandemic created as communicators embraced new technologies, working environments and complex rules, while still embracing the faith they're called to communicate.

Awards:

- First Place in Print Publications in the Newspaper Category for the Reporter. Look at issues at umcnic.org/Reporter. Judge said "nice use of type and color."
- Second Place in Video News Story Category for NIC News Today with Liz Gracie and Myron F. McCoy. Judges said they "loved the concept." Watch the vide at vimeo.com/ 577697818
- First Place in the Photojournalism Category for 2021 Social Distancing Ordination Service photo, which was the cover photo in the May 2021 Reporter.

So many talented and amazing communicators across the denomination are also deserving of accolades and have worked so hard, especially during the last two years during the pandemic. Congratulate and read a list of all the winners at umcommunicators.org.

Lay Leader Letters: Easter is not over yet!

By Eugene Williams, NIC Co-Lay Leader

What a blessing to experience another season of Lent and Eastertide. The 40 days journey plus the seven Sundays which is each a mini-Easter themselves, is always fulfilling.

Yes, 47 days to renew our baptismal covenant so we can move even closer to the cross. We've celebrated Lent, Passion Sunday, Maundy Thursday, Good Friday, Resurrection Sunday (and soon the Day of Pentecost).

But as Easter People, we can never relax in our work for the Lord because Satan never, ever takes a vacation. And as we bask in the warm glow of those 47 days of the Easter season, we are to be reminded that we are still in the early stages of the Eastertide Season.

Sisters and Brothers in Christ, Easter is not over! The Eastertide Season is really only fully consummated in the book of Revelation. So we must continue to read His word, pray, repent, forgive and love one another just as Christ loves us. There is no need to look in the tomb, for you will not find Him there! For He has risen! He has risen indeed! Let us stay on mission just like Christ did, because only what we do for Christ will last. With the storms of life raging around us, we must be very sure that we have an anchor that grips a solid rock. Jesus Christ is the solid rock upon which we can build our faith.

Your Co-Lay Leaders, Connie Augsburger, Mark Manzi, myself; and the entire Board of Laity encourage you to continue to engage in the life of your church; working with our clergy partners through prayer, worship, small groups, and service to our greater communities. Please let us know how we can be a resource to you on your walk of faith as we prepare for and await His triumphant return. Blessings to all.

Full communion plans with Episcopalians on hold By Heather Hahn

The third postponement of The United Methodist Church's legislative assembly not only has disrupted plans for a formal denominational separation but also for an interdenominational accord.

With so much uncertainty within the United Methodist fold, a proposed full-communion partnership between the denomination and The Episcopal Church remains on hold. The Episcopal Church has no plans to vote on full communion when it gathers for its General Convention this July in Baltimore.

Instead, Episcopalians are considering a resolution that commends the ongoing work of the Episcopal Church-United Methodist Dialogue Committee and its proposal for full communion, "A Gift to the World, Co-Laborers for the Healing of Brokenness."

Ecumenical leaders in both denominations agree: United Methodists should be the first to vote on the proposal itself.

"It was viewed as appropriate that the future direction of the UMC be clarified and hence its attitude toward the full-communion agreement be decided before it was voted on by The Episcopal Church's General Convention," said David N. Field, ecumenical staff officer for the United Methodist Council of Bishops.

Field added that significant parts of The Episcopal Church would not support full communion if United Methodist bans on same-sex weddings and "self-avowed practicing" gay clergy remain in effect.

Rising debate and defiance of those bans has led to multiple submissions to the coming General Conference for some kind of separation. But with The United Methodist Church's top legislative assembly now postponed until 2024, a theologically conservative group that seeks to maintain those restrictions has decided not to wait for General Conference action. The group moved up the launch date of a breakaway denomination, the Global Methodist Church, to May 1. Whatever comes next will take some time to shake out. The United Methodist Church has a method for most things, including disaffiliations.

The General Conference postponement also has delayed consideration of the proposed Christmas Covenant legislation that would give more autonomy to different regions of The United Methodist Church and potentially leave questions related to LGBTQ ministry up to each

What The United Methodist Church will look like in the next few years remains to be seen.

Field noted that it will be up to the Global Methodist Church to develop its own ecumenical relations in accordance with its teachings.

The Rev. Margaret Rose, deputy for ecumenical and interreligious relations for The Episcopal Church, told Episcopal News Service that any plan for full communion would be with the portion of The United Methodist Church that is LGBTQ-affirming. For now, she sees The Episcopal Church's resolution submitted to this summer's General Convention as an assurance to those United Methodists "that we want to continue in the struggle for justice with you."

As it stands, the proposal for full communion between Episcopalians and United Methodists makes no mention of LGBTQ inclusion. The document describes itself as "an effort to bring our churches into closer partnership in mission and witness to the love of God and thus labor together for the healing of divisions among Christians and for the well-being of all." Full communion is not a merger where denominations become one, such as what happened when The United Methodist Church formed in Rather, full communion means each church acknowledges the other as a partner in the Christian faith, recognizes the validity of each other's baptism and Eucharist, and commits to work together in ministry. Such an agreement also means Episcopalians and United Methodists can share clergy.

The United Methodist Church already has fullcommunion agreements with the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the Uniting Church in Sweden, five historically Black Pan-Methodist denominations and the Moravian Church in North America. Each of these fullcommunion partners has varied teachings related to homosexuality. The United Methodist-Episcopal dialogue, which dates to 2002, aims at drawing together two churches with historic ties to John Wesley's Church of England.

A full-communion agreement between the two also would complete a sort of ecumenical square. Like United Methodists, Episcopalians already have full communion with the Lutherans and Moravians. The only line missing in this church quadrangle is between the two denominations with arguably the most shared heritage.

The two churches owe their separation less to theological differences than to the disruption of the American Revolution. John Wesley remained a Church of England priest until the end of his days. But in the aftermath of the war, he took the momentous step of appointing clergy leaders to serve in the new nation just as many Church of England priests in the U.S. were heading to Britain. Wesley's efforts led to the 1784 birth of a new U.S. denomination that eventually would become The United Methodist Church, with nearly 13 million members across four continents.

The Episcopal Church, which retains its close ties to the Church of England, officially got started in the U.S. five years later. Today, The Episcopal Church has about 1.8 million members — mostly in the United States but also in the Caribbean and parts of Latin America.

At this point, there is no set timeline for when each denomination's ecumenical leaders expect to see full communion finally approved. The Episcopal Church's General Convention typically meets every three years and the United Methodist General Conference typically meets every four. The COVID-19 pandemic has thrown off the schedules of both big meetings.

The United Methodist Council of Bishops submitted the proposed full-communion agreement to the coming General Conference, then scheduled for 2020. What legislation will still be before the postponed General Conference, now set for 2024, remains uncertain.

But even amid uncertainty, ministry continues. That includes opportunities for United Methodists and Episcopalians to cooperate more fully in serving God and

"We would encourage local UMC congregations and annual conferences to continue to develop and deepen relationships with their Episcopal counterparts in this interim," Field said. "We are planning to continue our dialogue discussions with our Episcopal counterparts to deepen our relationships and plan for the future in the time between now and GC2024."

"We're continually working with our board and Drew to come up with creative ways to offset our carbon footprint while ensuring that our disciplinary mandate of preservation is met."

Abruptly cutting off the use of fossil fuels at Global Ministries-supported medical facilities, which are all over the world, would be catastrophic.

"We're in deep discussion about ... how do we balance the missional needs for human contact and human relationship with the missional needs related to ensuring the flourishing of a healthy Earth for the church of the future," Phillips said.

"We need to move quickly (to reach net-zero status by 2050), but we also are dealing with people in crisis right now and working to alleviate suffering right

Rev. Jin Yang Kim, Rev. Kyeong-Ah Woo, and their son Micah, visit with Rev. Arlene Christopherson at the NIC Chicago office on April 20. This was their first itineration back home in the U.S. since being commissioned as Global Missionaries serving in Geneva, Switzerland in 2017.

Missionaries return for first-time visit

United Methodist Global Missionaries are encouraged to itinerate in their home annual conference every three years to visit local churches in person, but the pandemic put a hold on global travel plans for most of them.

NIC Missionaries Rev. Kyeong-Ah Woo and Rev. Jin Yang Kim, who are serving the World Council of Churches (WCC) in Geneva, Switzerland, hadn't been back to Northern Illinois since they were commissioned in 2017, but they finally got the opportunity to return for a visit this Easter.

"We had a full two months of itineration planned in 2020, but it was not only postponed by cancelled (because of the pandemic)," said Rev. Woo. "This time is a limited itineration. We could only come for two weeks while our son Micah was on Easter break from school."

The main purpose of an itineration is to update churches on the missionary's work and ask for prayers and support. While this was a short trip home, Rev. Woo and Rev. Kim squeezed in several stops around the conference and caught up with friends they hadn't seen in five years.

"On Easter, we shared our mission work to the Sunday school class at Community UMC in Naperville," said Rev. Woo, who also preached at Wesley UMC in Sterling and Rev. Kim preached at Grace UMC in Dixon. They also had the chance to meet and catch up with the Korean clergy caucus.

The Rev. Hwa-Young Chong, lead pastor of Community UMC, said she feels it's important for the congregation to hear from NIC missionaries and was thankful to welcome Rev. Woo and Rev. Kim to share more about the WCC and the importance of ecumenical relationships.

"Both Rev. Woo and Rev. Kim shared powerful stories of world mission," said Rev. Chong. "Their commitment to justice and peace ministries was especially powerful. The congregation was deeply appreciative of their presence and witness."

While working with the WCC, Rev. Woo continues her work as the Coordinator of the World Mission and Evangelism. Rev. Kim continues his work on peace and justice issues, specifically the reunification of the Korean peninsula.

"One of my particular tasks is to organize pilgrim team visits which involve going to the most vulnerable places in the world where people are hurting and where nature is suffering," said Rev. Kim. "I've been organizing the pilgrim team visits to the most conflict countries, including Nigeria, South Sudan, Burundi, the Democratic Republic of Congo, Colombia, the Korean Peninsula, and to the most marginalized communities."

The couple is also busy organizing and planning for the 11th Assembly of the World Council of Churches that will take place in Karlsruhe, Germany, from August 31 to September 8, 2022, under the theme "Christ's love moves the world to reconciliation and unity."

As a Global Missionary, Rev. Woo says her global view has changed in the last five years. "Even though we intentionally try to include all those people who are suffering in other parts of the world in our prayers, they can seem far away," said Woo. "But now I can empathize more directly and see the importance of connectedness. We are all connected as one. When one suffers, we all suffer. I want to continue to promote that connection with local churches."

Rev. Kim says his concept of mission has changed from being "for" the people to "with" the people. "John Wesley said the 'world is my parish', and that's more than going out from the church, but Wesley was saying that we should go out and live with the people."

The couple's work permit has been extended, and they plan to be in Switzerland until 2023.

August: Summer Mission u

Who Can We Be Together?

Building Communities of Hope and Joy

Women

in Faith

Hybrid event

Great news— COMMUNITY is God's desire for us! Please join the Northern Illinois United Women in Faith (formerly United Methodist Women) at Mission u 2022 to reflect on the community that Jesus is calling us to be!

This year, the study will focus on Luke 13. In the midst of a devastating pandemic, divisive political climate, unaddressed systemic racism, ecological crises and economic turmoil, we turn to the stories of Jesus that have anchored Christian communities for two millennia.

Our hope is that we will leave Mission u with a bigger and broader vision of the community Christ is calling us to be in times of loss, grief and massive disruption. What would be possible if we tend to the needs of our communities in small yet radical ways, as Jesus did in Luke 13?

Our newly designed Mission u 2022 is more flexible and intergenerational than ever— with curricula for youth, children and adults.

Watch for further details at umwnic.org.

May 2022 Reporter 7

"This little light of mine, I'm gonna let it shine." I have great memories of sitting in those tiny green chairs at a small table in the kindergarten room at my home church. We would all shout "NO" when we came to the phrase "hide it under a bushel, NO, I'm going to let it shine."

The more we sang, the louder we would shout until one day, the upper-grade teacher came in to tell us we must quiet down. The unabashed passion for faith in the shouts of a 5-year-old reminds us of the joy and love of God among us.

We shine our light as Unitd Methodists in so many ways: Disciple Making, Belonging and Inclusion, Influence, Connection, Impact, and Experience of God through the UMC.

I know so many strong, faithful, deeply rooted United Methodists who love God, their church and the witness they offer. At times, we are missing an understanding of "How" we talk about our faith, our church, and our work. We more often need to channel a 5-year-old's passion. We need to stop hiding our light under a bushel so that the light can shine into our hearts, our homes and our community.

To help us better learn how to talk about faith and witness, justice and connection – United Methodist Communications has launched a campaign called #BeUMC. The campaign introduces us to four pillars of our denomination. Within those pillars, we live out core values that inform our faith, our discipleship and the work of our church.

- Disciple Making Christ-centered, deeply rooted, disciple-making, faithful and grounded in Scripture
- Belonging and Inclusion Diverse, justice-seeking, resilient and welcoming
- Influence, Connection, Impact missional, connected, world-changing and generous
- Experience of God through the UMC committed, grace-filled, Jesus-seeking, praying and Spirit-filled

Reread these core values and see where they resonate for you. How do you give witness to Jesus' love and grace, and where does your light shine? You may not resonate with all 18 core values, but some may pop out and rise to the top of your personal list. As you think about your congregation, where do you see your church shining a light, and what values are you living out.

Once you identify your passionate places of witness and faith, I invite you to think about how your light shines with those values. This is the heart and the core of our Wesleyan tradition, our United Methodist faith, and our reach into the world.

I was first drawn into the United Methodist Church after college through "Belonging" and "Inclusion." I found the diverse, justice-seeking, resilient, welcoming community of the UMC a place where I could grow and flourish, where I could explore God's call upon my life and feel supported. I stumbled over some traditions and practices – an open table for communion? That was mind-boggling. Yet, those differences taught me about an expansive God who welcomes all, a God I grew to love through the church's inclusion.

Almost 40 years later, I do not regret my choice. I have grown with the church and committed myself to living a grace-filled life of faith and witness. "This little light of mine, I'm gonna let it shine."

Where are you celebrating your faith, your church? Where are you shining your light today? Share your story with the hashtag #BeUMC.

Churches can access tools and messaging at ResourceUMC.org/BeUMC.
